Free flickr photos search

If you've ever surfed for pictures online, you've undoubtedly heard of Flickr.com – the most important online photo management site where you can upload, discover, and share your photos. Flickr is a great place to find some of the best pictures and photos on the web. However, because there are so many uploaded images, Flickr becomes a bottomless resource that is hard to search. Flickr does indeed allow you to customize a search on the site. You can search for photos added by tags, location, sets, and galleries. You can also search for date images that have recently been added, added by month, or the most interesting uploads of the last 7 days. With Flickr, you can even search for photos taken from a specific camera! Although these search options are readily available, they can become somewhat constrained or inefficient at times when you can't find what you're looking for. Have you ever spent hours trying to find the perfect picture? Do you keep combing the same tags? Click on each image for related leads? It's like trying to find a needle in a haystack. Fortunately, there are a few alternative search tools that can make search more efficient. So if Flickr's usual search filters don't cut it, try a few of them to get an image search that works for you. 1. Flickriver Flickrriver is a web-based viewer with a big difference to the original flicker – it allows the quick viewing of thousands of photos with a flow of photos option. This means that you never have to click Next to load the next new page. Since Flickriver is part of Flicker, it allows you to view photos of Flickr members taken by many different photographers, including both amateurs and professionals. You can click on any photo and get the official Flickr page where you can contact the photographer and see how to use their images. It is probably the fastest photo viewing tool and because of its unusual and convenient viewing experience, allows Flickrriver people to easily discover more relevant photographers and photos! 2. TinEye TinEye is an image search and recognition company with its mission to make their images easily searchable and accessible to everyone. Your focus is on reverse image search, which makes it possible to find where your images appear online. Just upload an image, search it for URL, or drag your pictures to start your search. After a few seconds, you get instant results. 3. Picsearch Picsearch helps you find images more easily as it connects users to the wide visual resources of the Internet. It uses a Design technology to crawl the web and create a searchable index of discovered images. How does it work? A user searches for an image after which a query is sent to Picsearch. The result is a series of thumbnails that are as relevant as possible. When the user clicks a thumbnail, the original Web site opens, where you can find where the image is located. With its 3 main features, the Picsearch image tool stands out from the rest of its competitors. It has a indexing algorithm and several family-friendly features that allow children to surf safely. Any material that is not suitable for children is separated by an advanced filter system. Last but not least, the site is user-friendly and perfect for fun and games, but also for serious business users. 4. Compflight With Compflight you can get the visual inspiration you need to finish any project you're working on! It is an image search engine specially designed to find images for blogs. The core of the Compflight experience lies in its various filters and amazing options. Combine this with an intelligent and easy-to-use tool and you'll quickly discover all the images you need in the most efficient way. 5. Imgur Imgur is a perfect place if you want to share your pictures online and enjoy some of the most popular and great pictures you can find online. It is used by millions of people every day. You can get these amazing images and be entertained and motivated by funny, inspiring and helpful images and stories from all over the world in no time. Imgur is currently one of the top 50 worldwide websites where its images are viewed billions of times every month. No matter what pictures you're looking for, it's always a good idea to have a few tricks up your sleeve when it comes to looking for Flickr.com. If you can get creative with these search tools, you can quickly customize your search and navigate through Flickr's databases even more efficiently in no time. Do you have a link like /farm3.static.flickr.com/2085/2177060015_258bcaff9_m.jpg and want to find out which user posted it, more pictures of that user, see the full format version, etc? Look no more, the answer is very simple! From the URL, you extracted the image name (2177060015_258bcaff9_m.jpg) and split it between the underscore. The first part is the photoID, the second part is the hash/salt and (if available) the third part is the size (full format: photoID_hash_size.jpg). Now add this photoID to and MAGIC that you have there, the Original Flickr Photo URL (and the user) ☺ The above example would be converted to Cheers! Drag this link onto your bookmark toolbar and click it when you create a Flickr image URL: Flickr Photo Page UPDATE 2012.20.26 – Flickr itself has a detailed page explaining the Flickr photo URL format. Did that help you? How do you see what? Consider giving. I don't advertise on my blog and I don't do it for profit. But a donation would always put a smile on my face. Thank you! – Buy me a coffee (3) (3) Do you have a Flickr account? We hear a lot of excitement these days about how many photos are uploaded to Facebook every day, but people sometimes forget About Flickr, which is still strong after all these years. Back in September, Flickr announced that her 5 billionth photo would be uploaded, which is no small feat. So what if you want to view or locate some of this photographic treasure? There are some great Flickr search engines out there. Ann pointed out 16 of them a few years ago, and now I'm here to show you the best of the best. If you are looking for a high quality photo for a project, article or website, or are bored, these sites can help you find what you want. 1. Compflight Compflight is a personal favorite among MUO authors. It is a simple website both in form and function, and it works very well. Enter your search query with Compflight, and you can choose whether you want to search for that word in the tags of photos or their text descriptions. You can also view creative Commons images, which is important if you want to use a photo for a project. Thumbnails of images will populate after searching and all you need to do is click on one to open the corresponding Flickr page. 2nd day Galaxy Tag Galaxy might have been probably the worst Flickr search engine in existence and I would still have included it on this list just because it's cool. Just enter your tag on the home page and click Go to a search page that shows what planets appear to be. If you click on the different planets, you can write your search for a specific day. For example, I originally searched for the word technology and planets called Computer, Phone, Laptop and Ipod popped up. Click the tag that most often describes what you're looking for, and you'll be taken to a 3D sphere image with all the photos associated with that tag. You can rotate the sphere by dragging it and clicking on individual photos to see it enlarged. Very cool. 3. Flickriver Flickrriver is another simple Flickr search engine. You can browse photos, groups, users, tags, and even places, and photos appear vertically on the page by relevance, current, or most interesting. You can also set the size in which photos appear on the page. 4. PictureSandbox [Broken URL Removed] PictureSandbox is not one of the nicer sites in this list, but it is still very effective. Simply enter your search on the home page and click the Send button to view photos not only on Flickr, but also on Stockport, Fotolia, Dreamstime, SmugMug and Webshots. If you unable to find the photo you are looking for on this page, there is a chance that it does not exist. 5. FlickrStorm FlickrStorm is a very minimalist photo search page. Like the others in this list, simply enter your search query in the box on the home page to start your search. There is an extended link that you can click if you want to search for Creative. Want. Photos that you can use commercially. FlickrStorm also lets you view your history of the photos you clicked on, as well as a tablet to which you can add and download photos. Honorable Mention: Flickr Flipper I decided to give an honorable mention of Adobe's Flickr Flipper application. It's an application that runs on Adobe Air and it's pretty easy. If you want to scroll through random Flickr photos because you're either bored or don't know exactly what you're looking for, try Flickr Flipper.
